Problem Statement:

We, the Students, are lucky to have access to dining halls. It allows us to gain healthy and sustainable meals while on campus at the University of South Carolina. Sometimes we students wish there could be a better way to handle the dining hall situation ranging from official wait time on food, tracking calories, or even the meals each cafeteria has throughout the day 24/7.

Who Is Experiencing This Problem?:

The student body and some staff are experiencing these problems. When it comes to wait times in the Russell House fast food restaurants, or the way that we would like to know the menu in each dining hall to save the trip of walking to one just to be disappointed. There are also students that enjoy eating healthy that would like to track their calories without having to go through such a hard process to get the information.

What Is the Problem?:

The problem for this Problem Statement is that we, the Students, are having trouble with having little information on our dining hall options. The University of South Carolina means very much to me and my fellow classmates, and I myself would be ecstatic about the opportunity to be able to have such an app available to ourselves.

Where Does the Problem Present Itself?:

This problem can present itself in many situations. Situations such as a student trying to make time for a meal between classes, a student focusing on the intake of what food/calories that they receive, and a student simply trying to figure out what food options are available so that they can eat what is necessary for their eating type.

Why does it Matter?:

This Problem matters as I believe that all students have the right to have the ability to easily be able to get food, follow their diets, know when it is the time for them to get something to eat, and so much more. In college, we students have to manage time properly so that we are able to fit so much work into that one day that we live at a time. Doing this is great, however, we students must be able to eat and not starve ourselves so that we are energized and are able to take on the battles of school work.
